EXHIBITIONS OF MANUFACTURE, &c.

Among the best means of promoting the cause of American industry; protecting its rights and elevating the character and condition of American mechanics and working men generally, we consider the popular Fairs for the public exhibition of their works, and the discussion of important matters connected with their interests, as the most effective. We are glad therefore in the fact, that the wealth producers in different parts of the country, the hard working, industrious mechanics farmers and working men, are making preparations for extensive exhibitions of their several arts. The agricultural Fair in this county we have already noticed, and hope and expect much from it. The Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association will hold a Fair for the exhibition of workmanship, machines, manufactures and productions from different parts of New England commencing on Monday next. This exhibition, from the time which has elapsed since the announcement of such intention, and the experience which the managers have had in such matters, and the local position of Boston, in the midst of a thriving manufacturing population, all promise that it will be a brilliant affair, and increase the already high reputation of New England for the extent, improvement and perfection of its manufactures. The Association have, the present year, secured the services of J. T. Austin, Esq. to deliver the address, which is to take place on Wednesday evening, the 3d of October.

On the seventh of October, the American Institute of New York will open their twelfth annual Fair in that city. The Honorable S. L. Southard of New Jersey, has been engaged to deliver the address. His well known devotion to the progress of American industry gives assurance that the cause will not suffer in his hands. The Institute have for several years been interested in the improvements of implements of husbandry of every variety. Its labors in this department have resulted in the production of a sub soil and a steam plough which are working wonders on the western prairies. A large number and various sorts of implements will be exhibited. Arrangements are making for a full display of American silk, in all forms, from the cocoon to the finished fabric. In short, the exhibition is intended to be a compressed view of our nation's unparalleled progress in the arts. The accommodations are on the most extensive scale, and the list of premiums will exceed that of any other ever distributed in this country.

In reference to these Fairs, which cannot fail to have an important influence upon the productive wealth of the country, we are happy in being able to inform our readers that we have engaged the services of an ardent friend to the productive interests, to report to us those matters of importance. Improvements in the arts descriptions of new and valuable manufactures in fact a picture of the Fairs, for the benefit of our readers. By being upon the spot, he will be enabled to furnish a series of interesting articles of value to the farmer and mechanic, and of importance and interest to every individual.

Within the last six months, we have received an addition of five hundred names to our subscription list, and we feel that the active exertions of our friends demand of us renewed efforts to gratify them, we mean to repay their kindness by increased efforts to please, and by and by, we are in hopes to be able so far to enlarge and improve our paper as to exceed their highest expectations.

The second Regiment paraded and were reviewed yesterday at Brewer. The several companies made a fine appearance and done themselves much credit. The Bangor Rifle company, dressed in their new uniform, looked beautifully. To be sure, their ranks were not so full as they should be, but we are pleased to learn that our young men are awakening to the importance of sustaining, at least, one good infantry corps in the city, and that ere long they will be as abundantly supplied with good soldiers, as the present active members are with the genuine military spirit. This being the fact, there will be no reason to complain another season of the want of full ranks.

MORE INDIAN MURDERS. Dates from St. Marks to the 7th instant state that outbreaks have occurred among the Indians, both in Middle and East Florida. In an engagement near Fort Andrews a sergeant and one man was killed. Fort M. Clure has also been attacked. One man wounded and six horses killed. Two volunteeers were killed near Fort Wheelock. A steamboat on the Suwannee was fired on, and one of the hands wounded. A letter from St. Augustine, dated September 6, states "two volunteers were killed last week near Micanopy, and their tongues cut out, and otherwise horribly mutilated."

The express rider from Micanopy was driven with the escort, into pickets by a large body of Indians. The steamer M. Call was fired into on the 28th ult. five miles below the mouth of the Santafe, by twenty Indians. Eight or ten men were fired followed by yells, when the party ran down to a point and joined an additional force, who again fired into the boat, wounding three or four of the crew. The fire was returned, and one Indian was seen to fall, who was borne off by his companions.

Lieutenant Hughes, sixth Infantry, committed suicide at Dresden's Bay. Cause unknown.

The number of interments in Philadelphia, last week, was 33 of whom 46 were under two years of age.

A. B. Ward, elected Representative to the Legislature from Houston.

We understand that the new patent carriage to go without the application of steam or horse power, but simply by the power of the rider applied to treadle, invented and constructed by our fellow citizen, Benjamin F. Adams, a worthy and ingenious mechanic, is a graceful and beautiful article. It was exhibited last evening and its operation tried in the presence of several scientific gentlemen, who pronounce it ingenious and interesting. Mr. Adams has expended nearly $1000 in getting up this carriage and it has been thought that he should in some way be remunerated for his perseverance and skill, and for this purpose it has been concluded to have a public exhibition of it this afternoon, and all those who feel disposed will have an opportunity to contribute. The exhibition will take place this afternoon at four o'clock.

John Smith is at last found out, viz. as one of the agents of Brandreth's pills. O tempora and mores! N. Y. Star.

This is a braconer. Mr. John Smith is a respectable stone mason and may be seen daily assisting in McAdams' bath street in this city. As to his ever having anything to do with Brandreth's pills we pronounce it a base fabrication. St. Louis Bulletin.

Now my friends you are both in error, John Smith is a hatter and resides not far from this city. He attends to his business and lets other people alone, as every honest man should. Bangor Whig.

Matthew Carey, died at Philadelphia a few days since, in the 80 year of his age. He received some injuries a short time since by being thrown from his carriage, they aggravated an intermittent fever, which proved the cause of his death.

The number of death in New York last week was 167. Of these 33 were men, 30 women, 39 boys, and 54 girls. Of the whole number, 29 died of consumption, 24 of cholera infantum, 6 of diarrhoea, 5 of dysentery, and 6 of scarlet fever.

We understand that the Rev. Jason Whitman, of Portland will preach at the Unitarian Church to-morrow.

The midding Interest Bank at Boston commenced redeeming its bills under five dollars on Monday.

PHILOSOPHY OF ADVERTISING. A late number of Chambers' Edinburgh Journal contains a very interesting article on the subject of advertising in the public papers, by an 'O. D. Trademan.' His ideas on the subject, are certainly worthy the attention of all who are anxious for business, and are simply and briefly as follows:

The first utility of frequent and regular advertising is this: there is at all times a large class of persons both in country and town, who have no fixed places for the purchase of certain articles, and are ready to be swayed and drawn towards any particular place which is earnestly brought under their notice. Indifferent to all, they yield without hesitation to the first who asks. Then in the country a considerable number of persons, who wish a supply of them, naturally open a communication with that address, which perhaps leads to much ulterior business. People in the country are also liable to be favorably impressed by the frequent sight of the name in the newspaper.

The advertising party acquires distinction in their eyes, and thus they are led in making a choice, to prefer him. But by far the most important effect of Advertising is one of an indirect nature, that conveys the impression that the party pretending or not pretending, quackish or not quackish, is anxious for business. One who is anxious for business is unceasingly exposed to be an industrious, attentive, civil person, who keeps the best articles at the cheapest rate, does every thing in the neatest and most tradesmanlike manner, and in general is every expedient to gratify and attract customers. Hence, like to purchase under their own eyes, and the system of advertising, as using them, that such circumstances exist at this particular shop, they select it accordingly. Such are the opinions of the old tradesman alluded to, and they are certainly supported by fact, for wherever an extensive or regular system of advertising is practiced, and no back-drawing or unconquerable circumstances exist, it is usually seen to be attended with a considerable share of success. One feature in the philosophy of the subject must be carefully attended to. A faint and unfrequent system of advertising does not succeed even in proportion. Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian Spring. Sunday Atlas.

THE ACTRESS.

BY F. A. DURIVAGE.

(Concluded.)

The fellow grinned from ear to ear. 'Ay, ay, said he, that'll do for the marines. I know it's the proper thing to say to the court, and the genteel thing to say to the drop, but between you and I there needn't be no secrets. I know the world a bit, my young one. Why bless you, I wasn't always keeper of a prison, no, no, I've lightened pockets with the best of them, but I peached and was first made turnkey, and then ye-er, I iz by degrees I haven't t' spite against ye tho' when I was in the profession I never used a knife myself. But you may as well confess to me.

'I have no confession to make, returned Luke doggedly. Well, it's all one for all that, your confession has been printed.

'What do you say?' exclaimed Luke, fiercely. 'Your confession has been printed and I know the chap what will make five hundred dollars by the spec. What's one man's meat another's poison, howsmever, I uphold you for dying true blue.

'Your language offends me.' 'Well I didn't mean to offend you, I come to see if I couldn't get nothing to please you you can have the best the market affords tho' you want three long enough to digest it. Ha ha, excuse me, I thought you'd like a bit of justification, I can get you brandy, gin or whiskey.

'I wish for nothing but to be alone. 'Oh, then perhaps you would like I should admit them people that come to take leave of you, for a whole squad have got a permit to see you.

'Who are they?' 'I don't know, a whole boodle of them.' 'Well, let them all come in, I will show them that I can at least die with the firmness of a christian.

'A christian? crake!' I can't stand that, cried the jailer. 'Why you're worse than Harry Blood that sharpened his knife on the bible to kill his father-in-law.

And the fellow left the cell. Again alone, the prisoner employed himself in earnest prayer, and when he rose from his devotions, felt his heart lighter and his manly resolution firmer. The rays of the sun piercing the must, and shining through the narrow grate upon his person, seemed a happy omen, the smile of Omnipotence cheering the last moments of his life. At an early hour the jailer admitted a visitor. It was a female. She was clothed and veiled, but she flew into the arms of the prisoner, forgetting of the presence of the rude jailer, who grained as he witnessed the embrace.

'Emily!' cried the prisoner, 'is it you?' 'Who else could it be?' murmured the poor girl. 'Yes, though I be sworn to another I have obtained his permission to visit you in this your last hour.'

'And Emily, do you still say you do not love me?' 'Luke, I never said it. And now, with an agony I speak, I love you, I almost adore you. You are innocent, I know it, but you will die, I am sure of that. O Luke, and could nothing save you.'

'Nothing, nothing. Ah Emily, how it would have soothed this hour to have heard you say, that wedded to my memory, you would never smile upon an earthly bridegroom.'

'Alas, Luke, I am vowed and betrothed to another. And I could almost love him for his defence of you for know, he is your brother.'

'My brother? can it be? Well, he may be to you what he was not to poor me. He paused and stifled his emotions. 'And must you perish?' cried Emily. 'I need I must.'

'Not on the scaffold Luke. Hark, hark, bend thine ear lower, I have a dagger in my bosom, the very knife with which they say you stabbed the murdered girl.'

'Ha! ha! And I can free myself from this shame.'

'Yes, Luke, and you will do it, will you not, my dear Luke?' Inquired the agonized and bewildered girl.

'Give it me.' 'Here, take it.' She passed it to him, but Luke shook his head sadly and let it drop silently upon the floor, and it lay unnoticed.

'Emily, said he, 'it must not be. Should I die by my own hand, I should forfeit my claim to that paradise in which I hope that we shall meet in bliss together.'

'Noble, heroic youth!' cried Emily, 'I am unworthy of you, and it is right that I should wed another. But hark, let me shroud my face, they are coming.'

The party now admitted into the cell, consisted of the father and mother of the prisoner. They approached and silently shook hands with him.

'Luke, said the Colonel, 'Albert would fain persuade me that you are guilty of loving the murdered girl improperly.'

'Luke fixed his eye upon his elder brother as he answered.

'Of that too I am innocent.' 'Well, said the stern father, 'we shall not dispute about that, you have brought shame upon us, Luke Howard, but I, even I, cannot forget that I am the author of your being, my blessing may be of no avail, yet take it.'

The prisoner was moved to tears by the unwonted kindness of his father. He pressed his hand against his heart and covered it with his kisses and his tears. Emboldened by the expression of his father, as he lifted his eyes to his countenance, Luke said.

'My father, yonder stands the poor girl whom I wished to wed Emily, whom you destined for my brother. Be a father to her, I am no more, and do you, Albert, forget the past and devote yourself to her. You well know what I mean Albert, for we can read each other's souls.'

The sobs of Emily were heard as the elder brother advanced and took her hand. At that moment her father entered the cell in haste and disorder.

'Away!' cried he to his daughter, snatching her hand from the grasp of Albert. 'Away!

you shall never wed Albert Howard, a dark, treacherous creature as his father! You poor boy, he said to I like, 'whom I hate not as I do your wretched father, and still more wretched brother, had you lived you should have wedded her. But fate has decided otherwise, still, let it comfort your dying moments to know that the hand once plighted to you shall never be given to another. Speak not Emily, it is your duty to obey.'

'Here is something in that voice, muttered Colonel Howard, that tells me you are not unknown to me. Once before, a dark suspicion crossed my mind.'

'Know me, cried Ashburn, striding up to him. 'I am your brother, your younger brother, Guy Howard. You bear upon your breast a token of my fraternal love. The brothers have met before as they meet now, in hate, but with a sterner greeting.'

'Howan!' cried the colonel, 'or I will denounce you.'

'At your peril Gilbert. Ha, ha! what say you now? Have I lived in vain? No, no, I have lived to see your pride humbled in the dust, and your youngest child, which should have been mine, for his mother was my plighted bride, perish on the scaffold.'

'No, no, cried Emily, 'it must not be, he is innocent.'

'He is called Albert, staring around him with a ghastly air. 'He is, I know it.'

'And you could not save him,' said Emily reproachfully.

'I will,' replied Albert, drawing hard his breath, and speaking through his teeth.

'It is too late, said the jailer, 'for here comes the sheriff.'

A cry of horror arose from the wretched Emily as the officer and the attendants entered, but his business was mercy.

'The prisoner is reprieved, said the functionary. An awful disclosure has been made. The witness against him was perjured, and he may be innocent. I arrest you,' he added, laying his hand upon Albert.

'Right, said Albert, 'I am the criminal.'

The effect of this avowal may be easily conceived. The prisoner started to his feet, the wretched father uttered a cry of horror, and Emily sprang to the side of Luke.

'You confess your crime, said the sheriff. 'I do, replied Albert. 'I was married to my wretched victim. Start not father, this true I was sworn to of her love, and sacrificed her to my hate when she stood in the way of my union with another. You, poor youth, was led by chance to the chamber of crime, with his dagger I done the deed, and he was found alone with the deceased. The witness was bribed, and I, by pretending to defend my brother and my victim, prevented the wretched woman from shrinking or flinching from contradiction or detection. I defended the prisoner, confess that was a master stroke, worthy of the arch fiend! Search my papers and you will find convincing evidence of my guilt. Luke, I do not ask forgiveness, sheriff, I shall disappoint you and the gaping world of a spectacle.'

'Seize, search and disarm him!' cried the sheriff.

Ere the order could be executed, Albert darted upon the knife which had fallen on the floor, and gave himself a mortal wound. Then drawing forth the weapon, exclaimed.

'Twas with this knife I murdered Angela. This knife has avenged her.'

The words had no sooner departed from his lips than he fell, all gasped, and died. A cry of horror filled the cell.

After a legal investigation, Luke Howard was formally released from custody, and received by his friends with every demonstration of joy. But although free from the bitterness of an ignominious death, the dark cloud that overhung his family shut out every ray of hope. His brother had perished by his own hand, leaving a memory blackened by the darkest crime, his father appeared that declining day by day, and his uncle, self proscribed, had fled a second time from his country, leaving his unhappy child behind him. There is no grief however, which can resist the healing influence of time, and when many months had rolled on, Luke and Emily were united, and although both wore traces of the ravages of grief, still, sustained by mutual affection and the sweetest consultations of religion, their sorrow softened into pensiveness and their doubts melted into love. The cool lived long enough to see them happy, and expired giving them his blessing. After this event and the departure of the colonel's lady for the south, the new married pair took up their abode in the ancestral mansion of the Howards, but they shortly left it to reside abroad.

GREATNESS.

Dialogue between two Roman Matrons.

LUCIA. I am the happiest wife in Rome, my Lucia.

LUCIA. I doubt it not. But there's Flavius' wife, the other day, scarce from the Forum to her house could pass, for congratulations that her husband won the Consulate.

LUCIA. That day my Cains sat at home with me, and read to me, my Lucia, little cared I who won the Consulate.

LUCIA. And there's Lactorius has obtained a government, his wife will be a queen.

LUCIA. Well, let her be so! My Quondam is to be a simple wife, this is my government, my husband's house, where, when he sits with me he is enthroned. Enough! You'll smile, but Juno be my witness I'd rather see him with his boy upon his knee, than seated in the Consul's chair, with all the Senate round him.

LUCIA. Yet his greatness must needs be thine.

LUCIA. I do not care for greatness. It is a thing lives too much out of doors; I stay where but at home, you will not find it. Once in a week, in its own house at supper with the family. Knock at any hour you choose, and ask for it nine times in ten they'll send you To the Senate or the Forum, or to such Or such a one in quest of it. 'Tis a month since Cains took a meal from home, and that I walk with my brother. If he walks, I walk along with him if I choose, or if I stay Behind, it is a rare 'twixt him and time, and when he's back and the door shut on him, Consummate happy is my world within, I never think of any world without.
